Tannoy

A weekend of video and short films by Czech, Slovak and UK artist.

'Tannoy', is the first UK instalment in a series of anglo-czech shows and screenings, hosted at Terrace Gallery, London and will consist of a weekend of video work from UK, Czech and Slovak artists. The collection of work for "Tannoy" uses the themes of travel and conversation as its starting points. Reflecting its diversity, the artists brought together here adapt video in a variety of formats from, short experiments and touching gestures to narrative based films and satirical acts for camera.

Fitting with the notion of conversation as exchange, The Enormous Space has invited Prague based curator and art critic Zuzana Stefkova to select 10 works she feels represent the current art scenes in the Czech Republic and neighbouring Slovakia. Featuring new videos from selected artist and pieces sourced on a recent trip to Slovakia, much of the work has not been shown before in London.

Presented alongside the main show reel will be the screening of two seldom seen Czech animations, Karel Zeman's 'The Fabulous World of Jules Verne' (1958) and Jiri Trnka's 'Cybernetic Grandma' (1962). Zeman pioneered the technique of Mysti-mation, which used a panoply of effects including live action, drawn sets, hanging miniatures, and clay-mation. 'Cybernetic Grandma' is one of Trnka's only science fiction films and analyses the possibility of human emotions being replicated by machines. Both films use travel, either into a technologically advanced age or into a fantastical world, as a means to explore moral codes in reaction to the developments of science and technology.
